

Mansouria Mokhefi

Head of the Maghreb Program, Ifri

Education

Mansouria Mokhefi Geist studied in France, where she graduated from Sorbonne-Paris IV in History, and from the Institute of Political Studies (Sciences-Po) in International Relations.

She earned a DEA on the educational policy in North Africa, as well as a doctorate from Sciences-Po, on the USA and the Algerian War of Independence.

She graduated in Arabic and Islamic Civilization from the Institut des Langues et Civilisations Orientales and earned an M.A. from the Institute of French Studies at New York University.

Work experience

She currently works as a research Fellow at the head of the Maghreb/Middle-East Program at IFRI (French Institute of International Relations), and teaches a seminar at New York University in Paris.

She formerly taught Middle Eastern Studies at Vassar College (New York City), and International Relations at New York University.

She serves as a member of the Cermom (Centre de Recherches Moyen-Orient Méditerranée) at the Institut des Langues et Civilisations Orientales where she taught North African History.