

Stewart Patrick

Senior Fellow and Director of the Program on International Institutions and Global Governance, Council on Foreign Relations

Dr. Stewart Patrick is senior fellow and director of the program on international institutions and global governance at the Council on Foreign Relations (CFR). His areas of expertise include multilateral cooperation in the management of global issues; U.S. policy toward international institutions, including the United Nations; and the challenges posed by fragile, failing, and post-conflict states.

From September 2002 to January 2005, Dr. Patrick served on the secretary of state's policy planning staff, with lead staff responsibility for U.S. policy toward Afghanistan and a range of global and transnational issues. Following government service, he was Research Fellow at the Center for Global Development, where he directed CGD's work on weak states and U.S. national security.

Dr. Patrick is a member of the Council on Foreign Relations and former CFR International Affairs Fellow. From 1997-2002, he was research associate at the Center on International Cooperation at New York University, where he also taught U.S. foreign policy.

Dr. Patrick is the author or co-author of four books, including Weak Links: Fragile States, Global Threats, and International Security (2011), and The Best Laid Plans: The Origins of American Multilateralism and the Dawn of the Cold War (2009), as well as numerous articles and chapters on the subjects of multilateral cooperation, state-building, and U.S. foreign policy. He is also the executive producer of CFR's Global Governance Monitor (www.cfr.org/ggmonitor), an award-winning, web-based, multimedia initiative that maps and evaluates multilateral efforts to address global challenges. In addition, he writes the blog "The Internationalist".

Dr. Patrick graduated from Stanford University with a BA in human biology and honors in humanities, and received his doctorate in international relations, as well as two masters degrees, in international relations and European history, from Oxford University, where he was a Rhodes Scholar.
