A SCIENTIFIC SIDE PROJECT:

"A Romanian Institute of Cellular Biology and Pathology"

Having a great desire to develop Cell Biology in Romania, in 1971 while in USA, Prof. Maya Simionescu together with Prof. Nicolae Simionescu initiated a daring project to create an Institute of Cellular Biology and Pathology (ICBP) in Bucharest, Romania, designing a detailed structural plan and the scientific program. The main objectives of ICBP were: biomedical basic research, training scientists from the country, Ph.D. and post-doctoral programs, promotion of modern cell biology and pathology in Romania and facilitation of international exchanges. Since 1979 when officially opened, Maya Simionescu was responsible for the scientific program, trained directly all young scientists in the framework of a Ph.D. program, (many of them are now working abroad in Europe and USA).

In nearly 35 years of intensive research, ICBP became internationally recognised. Under the leadership of Maya Simionescu, since 1995, ICBP was re-elected as Institution member of UNESCO-Molecular Cell Biology Network, Centre of Excellence of the Romanian Academy and of the Ministry of Education and Research and was selected, by competition, Centre of Excellence of the European Community.
