

THIERRY DE MONTBRIAL

President and founder of the World Policy Conference

Dear Jean-Claude, I believe that a certain issue was not addressed this morning and that's the European question. To start off this discussion, I would like to ask you two questions.

One is to place the – to keep it simple, let's say the "crisis" in Greece in the general framework of the financial crisis that erupted in 2007-2008.

The second, obviously related question: are you one of those who thinks that this crisis could be healthy for the future of the euro zone by, in some way, requiring member countries and others – the European Union countries as a whole – to build the type of economic and financial governance we have yet to see? Or do you take a more critical stance towards this issue?

I now have the pleasure of yielding the floor to you.