

Josef Joffe

Editor, Die Zeit

© Vera Tammen

Josef Joffe has been editor/co-editor of the German weekly Die Zeit since 2000. Previously he was columnist/ editorial page editor of Süddeutsche Zeitung (1985-2000). Abroad, his essays and reviews have appeared in: Foreign Affairs, Foreign Policy, The American Interest, New York Review of Books, Wall Street Journal, New York Times, Washington Post, Guardian, Commentary, New Republic, Prospect (London), Commentaire (Paris).

In 2005, he founded (with Zbigniew Brzezinski and Francis Fukuyama) The American Interest, on where he serves on the executive board.

His second career has been in academia. He has been teaching at Stanford since 2004, while serving as Senior/Distinguished Fellow at Stanford's Institute for International Studies. He is also Distinguished Fellow of the University's Hoover Institution. He has taught at Harvard, Johns Hopkins and the University of Munich. His most recent books are The Myth of America's Decline, 2014, WW. Norton and Überpower: America's Imperial Temptation (2006, translated into German, French and Chinese).

Boards: American Academy in Berlin, Ben Gurion University (Israel), Bard College Berlin, Theodor Geiger College (Berlin), Leo Baeck Institute (New York) German Children and Youth Foundation, Hamburg Symphony. Editorial boards: International Security (MIT), Internationale Politik (Berlin), The American Interest (Washington), The National Interest (1900-2005).

Honors: Honorary Degrees Swarthmore College and Lewis and Clark, U.S.A. Federal Order of Merit (Germany).