

THIERRY DE MONTBRIAL

Founder and Executive Chairman of Ifri, Founder and Chairman of the WPC

My last word before the end of this fascinating day is that if we have brought the subject of global health to the WPC it is precisely because its usual participants and members are people who have an interest in global governance in general from a global viewpoint. There is a wonderful and very rich community of experts on global health or on healthcare problems but most of them have a very limited understanding or familiarity with political issues and international politics in general. With the WPC – Health and the WPC in general, is to try to bring the two together to develop some useful insights thanks to this complementary and trans-disciplinarity, which is always the case with complexity.

I propose to conclude with this, and we will soon be in touch with all today's speakers. All today's debates will be online on the WPC website tomorrow and as you know, a book will be produced in the next few weeks with written contributions and summaries of the debates. This will be widely distributed before the next plenary of the World Policy Conference, scheduled for the end of February.

Thank you very much to all the speakers and contributors. I feel that this first edition of the WPC – Health was a success thanks to you and has produced a lot of food for thought. I think many issues have been identified that we will try to look at in more depth at the next meeting. Thank you, everyone and I look forward to seeing you soon.