

MICHEL KAZATCHKINE

Former Executive Director of the Global Fund to fight AIDS, tuberculosis and malaria, Senior Fellow at the Global Health Centre of the Graduate Institute for International and Development Studies, Geneva

Thank you also for pointing out the importance of the regional WHO networks instead of looking at the WHO as if everything has to come from Geneva, actually acknowledging the importance of the regional structures. I think that this is something that you also alluded to, Juliette. As we think of governance and reforming the architecture in the future, there should be more emphasis on the regional structures. Maybe, Christian, you would agree that there are regional epidemiological and response patterns to pandemics and we certainly need hubs to manufacture essential supplies, vaccines, diagnostic therapeutics, etc., in each region. We have to adapt our governance structure and work on preparedness and response culturally and politically to regional patterns.